- Our tech stacks are overwhelming
- Changing demographics, poor participation rates, wealth transfer, fluctuating disposable income, 1.8M nonprofits, total fundraising is going up, and …

a very caring public

And we choose to be here!

Mid-Market Solutions

New wave of solutions: Deed, Millie, Groundswell, GoodWorld

How did we get here?

The Market Evolved – But Not in the Right Direction

- Software has become increasingly complex, requiring more work — built for edge cases, not scale
- The core problem remains unsolved: how do we use software to grow workplace giving?

The Workplace Giving Dilemma

Go deep or go broad

Go deep or go broad?

This is an economics problem

It's the same dilemma as individual donors:
Major gifts or mid-level donors?

- If I "go deep", I can concentrate limited resources on the largest returns
- If I "go broad", I build a large base of donors to mine for larger gifts

"Do I focus on a 50,000-employee company or 50 1,000-employee companies?"

Go Deep

Pros

Higher revenue per relationship
Fewer companies can drive a significant portion of total campaign dollars

Stronger, strategic partnerships
Deeper engagement with leadership and long-term alignment

More predictable outcomes
Established companies = more stable campaigns and forecasting

Opportunity for major gifts & sponsorships
Access to executives and corporate philanthropy layers

Cons

Competition
CSR platforms

Resource intensive
High effort to win, launch, and support each campaign

Long sales cycles
Harder to break into large employers without existing relationships

Limited scalability
Growth constrained by team capacity

Higher dependency risk
Losing one large partner has an outsized impact

Go Broad

Pros

Scalable growth model
More companies → more total opportunities over time

Faster onboarding & deployment
Shorter cycles, easier to launch campaigns

Diversified revenue base
Less reliance on a few large employers

Pipeline for future growth
Smaller companies today → larger partners tomorrow

Cons

Lower revenue per campaign
Individual campaigns may generate less impact

Harder to engage deeply
Less access to leadership and strategic alignment

Operational complexity at scale
Managing many campaigns can strain teams without the right tools

Retention challenges
Smaller companies may be less consistent year-over-year

Time to Reimagine

What is my workplace giving wishlist?

In a perfect world ...

- Offer large employers an alternative to CSR platforms
- Offer any company something easy to use
- Software economics have to work
- Help me increase the number of companies running campaigns ... more, better, faster, cheaper, and easier

What do you think?
